DESCRIPTION
In an interview, Luce Guilbeault retraces the important stages of her film and theatrical career and reveals her vision of Québécois cinema, an industry she actively shaped and formed. According to her, the emergence of a new cinema is an important phenomenon, and she dreams of a role that would do her justice. She hopes for a cinema that further expresses the realities and joys of the Québécois people. The interview is punctuated with comments of praise and adulation by such artists as Michel Tremblay and Marcel Sabourin.
