DESCRIPTION
A man suffering from acute stress is followed by two hooded men who kidnap him and take him to a psychiatrist. The doctor prescribes a stay at a vacation colony which seems more like a concentration camp. Following the doctor's orders, he immerses himself in nature, his therapy consisting of identifying with a pine tree. He embarks on a wild escapade where he revels in nature and bathes in a lake but his torturers pursue him, club him and hang him by his feet. This is an essay on the question of being.
